Parrot Smuggler Gets 27 Months

by Francisco Gonzales
(Reprinted from The Monitor, McAllen, Texas)

A Tennessee man who pleaded guilty to parrot smuggling charges received a 27-month prison term Thursday in McAllen federal court.

U.S. District Judge Ricardo Hinojosa gave William Zoner, 51, the maximum penalty allowed under federal sentencing guidelines.

Zoner pleaded guilty in April to one count of smuggling 88 parrots into the United States from Mexico in the trunk of a car. Thirty-eight of the parrots died in transit.

"The fact that you brought the birds into this country illegally is totally unacceptable," said Hinojosa as he sentenced Zoner. "The inhumane treatment of the birds is totally unacceptable."

Assistant U.S. Attorney Terry Leonard called the sentence "appropriate considering the inhumane treatment of the birds and the potential dangers to the poultry industry."

Mexican parrots are potential carriers of Newcastle's disease, a fatal fowl disease. A 1985 outbreak of Newcastle's disease caused $52 million in damage to the California poultry industry, Leonard said.

Leonard said Zoner was arrested in January after U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service agent Joe Ramos saw Zoner smuggling birds from Mexico into Brownsville.

Ramos followed him to an Alamo address where he loaded the birds into a second car, driven by Gary Bellamy. Bellamy and Zoner drove to a U.S. Border Patrol checkpoint in Sarita, where Ramos and Border Patrol agents seized the birds and arrested Zoner, Bellamy, Zoner's wife, Shirley, and two others.

A grand jury charged the five in February with seven counts of conspiracy and bird smuggling.

Bellamy, Mrs. Zoner and the others pleaded guilty to smuggling charges and agreed to testify against Zoner in exchange for leniency, Leonard said.

Ramos said the Fish and Wildlife Service is stepping up its investigation of parrot smuggling.

"Between the Fish and Wildlife Service and the U.S. Attorney's Office, we are going to vigorously enforce the smuggling law," he said.

The maximum penalty for bird smuggling is five years in a federal prison and a $250,000 fine.

AFA Salutes its Life Members

edited by Jack Clinton-Eitniear

The Life Membership category is the highest caliber of membership allowed in AFA. Being a Life member is an excellent way to express your support for an organization and to show faith in its future survival and development. We applaud the following nine Life members in the American Federation of Aviculture and encourage the membership to consider increasing their membership category to Life and show support for AFA and its vast array of activities.

The Oklahoma Cage Bird Society

When we think of avicultural “hot spots,” generally California, Florida or Arizona comes to mind. The fact of the matter is that Tulsa, Oklahoma deserves recognition as well being the home of the Oklahoma Cage Bird Society.

Formed in September of 1983, OCBS is nearly as old as AFA itself. Composed of approximately 115 untiring members, they gather on the third Wednesday of the month for their meeting at the Martin East Regional Library. This is a productive society. A sampling of some of their activities includes a bird show in October, a spring cockatiel show and bird fair, an adopt-a-bird program that places unwanted pet birds with suitable individuals, and a Bird Care Hotline where your avian health care questions are answered through referral to a specialist in the area. In addition to these activities, they produce an excellent bulletin under the editorship of Richard Bewley.

While serious monitoring of legislation and public education requires most of the club’s time, they do find time to “take their hats off.” As quoted from their bulletin, “...but our club is mostly for fun. We hold a monthly meeting featuring programs and speakers on all aspects of aviculture. It’s a time to get together with people who love birds as much as you do.”

The Oklahoma Cage Bird Society, Inc. is an affiliated society of the AFA and an active supporter. Their officers are frequently in attendance at the annual and winter conventions. In addition, they are currently marketing the Conservation T-shirt. Definitely a respected member of the avicultural community, may they “live long, prosper and grow.”

Executive Committee Holds Spring Meeting in Washington

The Executive Committee held its annual spring meeting on May 19 & 20 at the Dulles International Holiday Inn, Virginia.

A summary of the meeting’s minutes include:
- A report from President Tom Marshall on the membership promotion and fund raiser. Thus far 159 members have responded with donations exceeding $4,000.
- Opal Crosser, Convention Chair, reported that 32 booths have already been sold for the upcoming convention. If you have never attended an AFA convention, this is an excellent time to start!
- It was motioned and approved that the president determine the recipients of AFA Service Awards.
- An additional 500 Watchbird binders have been ordered and will be available this fall.
- Bill Wilson has resigned, due to health reasons, as Mid-eastern Regional Vice-president. Bill’s contributions to AFA and aviculture are numerous. We wish him the best of success in future endeavors and a speedy hospital recovery.
- Motion was made and approved to increase display advertising rates in Watchbird by approximately 25% to become effective January 1, 1990. Watchbird rates have not increased in a number of years. Even with the rate increase, the rates will remain substantially below those of other avicultural publications.
- Val Clear has resigned as Chair of the Education and Media Committee but remains active in both the Conservation and CITES Committees. Val implemented the highly successful slide media program and has been a faithful patron of AFA for a number of years.

5,000 Years of Bird Breeding Experience

That’s a conservative estimate of the number of years’ experience in breeding birds of the total AFA membership. Despite this rather impressive resource base, every year countless aviculturists attempt to breed new species of birds without the benefit of those years of experience. Writing an article for Watchbird magazine may be the most lasting contribution you can make to aviculture. Articles are frequently referred to for years and cited in major scientific and popular publications. Watchbird magazine does not have a staff of writers but relies on its membership to contribute articles for publication. Article writing is not difficult. The editorial staff is always available to assist with your manuscript preparation and will edit articles, if needed, in hopes of correcting (and not adding) grammatical errors. AFA will provide limited compensation for your contributions. Personal experiences on breeding all species of birds are especially encouraged. Articles need not be typed but should be written legibly. Photographic support (slides or prints) are encouraged and will be returned after publication, if requested, providing a self-addressed, stamped envelope is included.

Assist us in documenting 5,000 years of avicultural experience by submitting an article for publication in Watchbird magazine.
The American Federation of Aviculture, like other medium sized non-profit organizations, relies greatly upon volunteers. Consistent with a recent finding that six percent of scientists publish over half the literature so, too, only a small percentage of volunteers contribute the majority of the effort. This short profile is about a member of the six percentile.

Ms. Vicki Fletcher was brought to your attention in the June/July (1986) issue of Watchbird as a result of her creation of the 93-page computer generated Watchbird Index. Elected as Executive Secretary in 1987, she was elected Chief Corporate Financial Officer in 1988 and fulfilled the obligations of both offices above everyone’s expectations.

Vicki is a member of many international, national and local bird societies and volunteers her services to these societies as well. She is currently the Census Registrar and Membership Chairperson for the Amazona Society, the International Loriidae Society and the Fig Parrot Group.

In addition to donating her computer and organizational skills to several avicultural societies, she finds time to breed and exhibit a number of psittacines. An article on her breeding of the Umbrella Cockatoo was published in the Oct/Nov ‘88 Watchbird.

There is an old saying, “If you want to get something done, give it to a busy person.” Vicki Fletcher, without question, is a busy person and undoubtedly gets “something done.” Quoting Editor Emeritus Sheldon Dingle, “AFA owes a deep debt of gratitude to Vicki Fletcher, a volunteer of the finest caliber. Fellow members, when you chance to meet her, doff your hats, curtsy, and kiss her hand — she deserves it.” I could not have said it better.
